Artyzen Singapore Infuses Maximalist Design With Hyperlocal Sensibilities

Artyzen Singapore is designed to blend heritage with modern luxury. Commissioned by Shun Tak Real Estate, the interiors by Nicholas Graham & Associates create a sophisticated urban retreat.

Standing out on the star-studded hotel stretch of Cuscaden Road is no easy feat, but Hong Kong-based hospitality brand Artyzen's first international outpost in Singapore shines through a potent mix of design maximalism and emphasis on the hyperlocal. Built upwards rather than outwards, the design-led hotel expresses itself right from the point of entry, swapping out trendy minimalism for a bold colour and intricate design.

Design story

To match its emphasis on heritage, Artyzen Singapore occupies the prime real estate formerly known as Villa Marie, a 1940s-era mansion built by Tan Hoon Siang, the great-grandson of one of Singapore's best-known philanthropists, the late Mr Tan Tock Seng.

Paying homage to its botanical past, the building weaves greenery into its architectural narrative, spiraling upwards with pockets of lush vegetation that spread across its trellised columns and dazzle off its sky gardens.

The Lobby Area

The lobby at Artyzen Singapore is a testament to artistic vision with bold floral motifs that recall the vibrant synergy of Singapore's traditional and contemporary cultures.

Quenino by Victor Liong

Casual dining options come in the form of the all-day dining restaurant on the first floor which strives to please each and every guest.

Cafe Quenino

An array of signature dishes welcomes an attractive all-day dining menu.

Elongated ceilings with high archways expand one's perception of space, leading to an airy, resort-like feel in the heart of one of the most urbanised parts of town.

Guest rooms

Opt for a Terrace Suite and one will have access to a thoughtfully-appointed living area, alongside a completely private outdoor garden with ample space for a calming yoga practice as the sun rises, or lounging with a drink when the sun sets.

Penthouse

The Penthouse is the perfect blend to a private luxurious Bliss.
